New legal watchdog appointed

A distinguished lawyer with more than 20 years' experience in the legal profession has been appointed as South Australia's next Legal Profession Conduct Commissioner.

Outgoing Commissioner Greg May is due to finish at the end of the month.

His replacement, Anthony Keane, will start work at the beginning of next week and work with the outgoing Commissioner to ensure there's a seamless transition.

Quotes attributable to Kyam Maher

Anthony Keane is a well-respected member of the profession, who has worked in both private practice and in the public sector at the Crown Solicitor's Office.

Through his work as a Solicitor and Senior Solicitor within the Civil Litigation Section, then as Counsel within the Crown Counsel Section, he has demonstrated his skill and experience in understanding and analysing issues across a broad range of practice areas.

I look forward to him bringing his expertise and skill to this important role.

I'd also like to thank Greg May for his work over the past eight years.

As South Australia's first Legal Profession Conduct Commissioner, he has played a vital part in bringing greater levels of accountability to the legal profession.
